

No. 04-413

IN THE
Supreme Court of the United States

THE CITY OF ALBUQUERQUE,
a municipal corporation, et al.,

Petitioners,

v.

RICH HOMANS and SANDER RUE,

Respondents.

ON PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE
UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE TENTH CIRCUIT

BRIEF AMICI CURIAE OF CURRENT AND FORMER STATE COURT JUSTICES AND JUDGES IN SUPPORT OF PETITIONERS

DEBORAH GOLDBERG
Counsel of Record
BRENNAN CENTER FOR JUSTICE
AT NYU SCHOOL OF LAW
161 Avenue of the Americas
12th Floor
New York NY 10013
(212) 998-6730

Counsel for Amici Curiae

TABLE OF CONTENTS

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES iii

INTERESTS OF THE AMICI CURIAE..... 1

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT 2

ARGUMENT 3

I. The Changes in Judicial Campaigns Since the Decision in Buckley Are Grounds for Reconsideration of the Circumstances Under Which Spending Limits Might Be Constitutional. 3

 A. Judicial Campaigns Have Materially Changed for the Worse Since Buckley. 4

 B. The Unlimited Money Chase in Contemporary Judicial Elections Undermines Public Confidence in the Courts..... 6

 C. This Court Should Grant a Writ of Certiorari To Clarify the Application of Buckley to Circumstances Not Considered in That Case. 8

II. Limits on Spending in Judicial Campaigns Are Supported by Especially Compelling Interests Not Considered in Buckley..... 9

 A. Courts Should Be Permitted to Consider Whether the Interest in Judicial Impartiality Supports Spending Limits in Campaigns for the Bench. 10

B. Courts Should Be Permitted to Consider Whether the Interest in Judicial Independence Supports Spending Limits in Campaigns for the Bench.....	11
C. Courts Should Be Permitted to Consider Whether the Interest in the Appearance of Impartiality and Independence Supports Spending Limits in Campaigns for the Bench. ...	12
CONCLUSION	13

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Cases

Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Lavoie , 475 U.S. 813 (1986).....	13
Buckley v. Valeo , 424 U.S. 1 (1976).....	2, 9
Griffen v. Ark. Judicial Discipline & Disability Comm’n , 130 S.W.3d 524 (Ark. 2003).....	11
In re Kinsey , 852 So. 2d 77 (Fla.), cert. denied , 124 S. Ct. 180 (2003) .	10
In re Murchison , 349 U.S. 133 (1955).....	10
Mistretta v. United States , 488 U.S. 361 (1989).....	13
Raab v. State Comm’n on Judicial Conduct , 793 N.E.2d 1287 (N.Y. 2003).....	10
Republican Party of Minnesota v. White , 536 U.S. 765 (2002).....	4, 8, 10, 11
Suster v. Marshall , 149 F.3d 523 (6th Cir. 1999), aff’g , 951 F. Supp. 693 (N.D. Ohio 1996).....	8
Watson v. State Comm’n on Judicial Conduct , 794 N.E.2d 1 (N.Y. 2003)	10

Law Review Articles

- David Barnhizer, “On the Make”: Campaign Funding and the Corrupting of the American Judiciary, 50 Cath. U. L. Rev. 361 (2001)..... 7, 13
- Paul D. Carrington & Adam R. Long, The Independence and Democratic Accountability of the Supreme Court of Ohio, 30 Cap. U. L. Rev. 455 (2002) 5, 11
- Anthony Champagne, Interest Groups and Judicial Elections, 34 Loy. L.A. L. Rev. 1391 (2001)..... 6, 8
- Erwin Chemerinsky, Preserving an Independent Judiciary: The Need for Contribution and Expenditure Limits in Judicial Elections, 74 Chi.-Kent L. Rev. 133 (1998)..... 9, 11
- Deborah Goldberg, Public Funding of Judicial Elections: The Role of Judges and the Rules of Campaign Finance, 64 Ohio St. L. J. 95 (2003)..... 9
- Hon. Thomas R. Phillips, Electoral Accountability and Judicial Independence, 64 Ohio St. L.J. 137 (2003) 7
- Ofer Raban, Judicial Impartiality and the Regulation of Judicial Election Campaigns, 15 U. Fla. J.L. & Pub. Pol’y 205 (2004)..... 10
- Hon. William H. Rehnquist, Keynote Address at the Washington College of Law Centennial Celebration, 46 Am. U.L. Rev. 263 (1996) 13
- Roy A. Schotland, Campaign Finance in Judicial Elections, 34 Loy. L.A. L. Rev. 1489 (2001)..... 8

Roy A. Schotland, Financing Judicial Elections, 2000: Change and Challenge , 2001 L. Rev. Mich. St. U.-Detroit C.L. 849	4
--	---

Other Authorities

Brennan Center for Justice, Buying Time 2004: Television Advertising in the 2004 Supreme Court Elections , at http://www.brennancenter.org/programs/buyingtime_2004/storyboard_2004_index.html	5
--	---

J.J. Gass, After White: Defending and Amending the Canons of Judicial Ethics (Brennan Center for Justice 2004), at http://www.brennancenter.org/resources/ji/ji4.pdf	9, 10, 12
---	-----------

Deborah Goldberg & Samantha Sanchez, The New Politics of Judicial Elections 2002 (Justice at Stake 2004), at http://faircourts.org/files/NewPoliticsReport2002.pdf	4, 5
---	------

Deborah Goldberg, Craig Holman & Samantha Sanchez, The New Politics of Judicial Elections (Justice at Stake 2002), at http://www.justiceatstake.org/files/JASMoneyReport.pdf	4, 5
--	------

Greenberg Quinlan Rosner Research & American Viewpoint, National Public Opinion Survey, Frequency Questionnaire (2002), at http://faircourts.org/files/JASJudgesSurveyResults.pdf	7
--	---

Greenberg Quinlan Rosner Research & American Viewpoint, National Public Opinion Survey, Frequency Questionnaire (2001), at http://www.justiceatstake.org/files/JASNationalSurveyResults.pdf	6
--	---

Justice at Stake, 2004 State Supreme Court Elections Monitoring Project, at http://justiceatstake.org/content/Viewer.asp?breadcrumb=4,126,103,475	4
National Center for State Courts, How the Public Views the State Courts: A 1999 National Survey , at http://www.ncsc.dni.us/ptc/ptc.htm	6
Texans for Public Justice, Payola Justice (1998), at http://www.tpj.org/docs/1998/02/reports/payola/ conclusions.html	6
Texas Office of Court Administration & State Bar of Texas, The Courts and the Legal Profession in Texas—The Insider’s Perspective: A Survey of Judges, Court Personnel, and Attorneys , Executive Summary (1999).....	7

With the consent of the parties, Amici Curiae hereby submit their brief in support of the petition for a writ of certiorari in this case.¹

INTERESTS OF THE AMICI CURIAE

Amici Curiae are current and former state court justices and judges, who are deeply concerned about the growing influence of special interest money on judicial campaigns.² Many of the Amici have personal experience as candidates in judicial elections, and all of them deplore the disturbing trends described in this brief. Amici do not necessarily support spending limits in any particular campaigns for the bench, but they believe that states should have the option to consider such limits as a narrowly tailored response to imminent threats to the real and perceived impartiality and independence of the judiciary. Amici recognize that the instant case does not pertain directly to campaigns for the bench. But in the instant case, and in the leading case on judicial campaign expenditure ceilings, Buckley v. Valeo, 424 U.S. 1 (1976) (per curiam), has been read as an absolute bar to such limits. Amici therefore urge this Court to grant the petition to resolve whether that interpretation is correct and, if it is, to reconsider Buckley.

¹ Letters of consent from counsel for all parties have been filed with the Clerk of this Court. No party's counsel authored any part of this brief. No person or entity other than Amici and their counsel contributed monetarily to preparing or submitting the brief.

² Amici curiae are former Chief Justices of state high courts: Hon. James G. Exum, Jr. (North Carolina Supreme Court, 1986-1994), Hon. Richard P. Guy (Washington Supreme Court, 1999-2001), Hon. William C. Hastings (Nebraska Supreme Court, 1987-1995), Hon. Conrad L. Mallett, Jr. (Michigan Supreme Court, 1997-1998); Hon. Vincent L. McKusick (Maine Supreme Judicial Court 1977-1992), Hon. Robert A. Miller (South Dakota Supreme Court, 1990-2001), Hon. Thomas A. Zlaket (Arizona Supreme Court, 1997-2000); former and current Associate Justices and Associate Judges of state high courts: Hon. Andy Douglas (Ohio Supreme Court, 1985-2002), Hon. Stewart F. Hancock (New York Court of Appeals, 1986-1993), Hon. Howard A. Levine (New York Court of Appeals, 1993-2002), Hon. David Newbern (Arkansas Supreme Court, 1985-1998), Hon. Alice Resnick (Ohio Supreme Court, 1989-present), Hon. Cruz Reynoso (California Supreme Court, 1982-1987); and former Justices and Judges of intermediate appellate and trial courts: Hon. Murry Cohen (Court of Appeals for the First District of Texas, 1983-2002), Hon. Donald J. Horowitz (Superior Court of Washington for King County, 1973-1977).

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

The constitutionality of spending limits in judicial elections has never been considered by this Court. When Buckley was decided, campaigns for the bench were inexpensive, uncontentious, and largely unnoticed. There was no call for expenditure ceilings under the circumstances of those campaigns, and there was no reason for the Buckley Court to decide whether such caps could survive constitutional scrutiny.

But judicial elections have changed substantially since the 1970s. Several states have seen million-dollar campaigns for their Supreme Courts, and an arms-race mentality is growing, as candidates build ever-larger war chests in the search for electoral success. Without spending limits to reduce the demand for private contributions, candidates increasingly must solicit funds from wealthy special interests on either side of the issues likely to come before the court. The highly visible infusions of unlimited special interest money into the coffers of judicial candidates leaves the public wondering whether justice is for sale.

To date, courts have not been willing to consider the changed circumstances of modern campaigns for the bench, which were not and could not be considered in Buckley, when reviewing the constitutionality of spending limits in judicial campaigns. Their refusal is grounded on the same premise that supports the Tenth Circuit decision in this case—that Buckley represents an absolute bar to spending limits no matter what the circumstances. With judicial elections rapidly deteriorating—and, with them, public confidence in the courts—the petition in this case should be granted to clarify whether that interpretation is correct and, if so, to reconsider Buckley. See Point I.

The petition should also be granted to resolve whether interests not considered in Buckley might justify spending limits in judicial elections. At least three distinct interests—in the impartiality of the judiciary, in its independence, and in the appearance of impartiality and independence—are potentially compelling enough to support such limits. At this critical juncture, when all three interests are in serious jeopardy, this Court should take the opportunity to consider whether Buckley permits consideration of new rationales for spending limits, and if it does not, to reconsider Buckley. See Point II.

ARGUMENT

I. The Changes in Judicial Campaigns Since the Decision in Buckley Are Grounds for Reconsideration of the Circumstances Under Which Spending Limits Might Be Constitutional.

In recent years, studies have documented the increasing demand for large sums of money to support candidacies for the bench in states with elective judiciaries. Because the contributions come principally from parties and attorneys who appear in court, the public concludes that the contributors are intending to influence, and do influence, decision-making on the bench. Because these developments post-dated the decision in Buckley, and because Congress did not presume to regulate judicial elections in the Federal Election Campaign Act, the Buckley Court did not consider the constitutionality of spending limits in campaigns for the bench. This Court should grant the petition for a writ of certiorari in this case to clarify whether Buckley bars such limits in all elections and, if it does, to reconsider Buckley.

A. Judicial Campaigns Have Materially Changed for the Worse Since Buckley.

It is no secret that “campaigning for a judicial post today can require substantial funds.” Republican Party of Minnesota v. White, 536 U.S. 765, 789 (2002) (O’Connor, J., concurring). Fundraising by state Supreme Court candidates jumped from $28,291,950 in 1998 to $45,636,059 in 2000, an increase of 61 percent in just one election cycle. Deborah Goldberg, Craig Holman & Samantha Sanchez, The New Politics of Judicial Elections 7 (Justice at Stake 2002), at <http://www.justiceatstake.org/files/JASMoneyReport.pdf> [hereinafter New Politics 2000]. “That increase was no ‘sport,’ but a new peak in a clear, dramatic trend whether viewed in terms of total dollars, or dollars-per-seat, or percentages.” Roy A. Schotland, Financing Judicial Elections, 2000: Change and Challenge, 2001 L. Rev. Mich. St. U.-Detroit C.L. 849, 862. In 2002, the four general election candidates for two Ohio Supreme Court seats raised a total of $6,241,583, and none raised less than $1,193,732. Deborah Goldberg & Samantha Sanchez, The New Politics of Judicial Elections 2002 15 (Justice at Stake 2004), at <http://faircourts.org/files/NewPoliticsReport2002.pdf> [hereinafter New Politics 2002]. With almost a month still to go until the 2004 election, three Ohio Supreme Court candidates had war chests of more than $1 million. Justice at Stake, 2004 State Supreme Court Elections Monitoring Project, at <http://justiceatstake.org/contentViewer.asp?breadcrumb=4,126,103,475> (reporting fundraising through Oct. 5, 2004).

The high and unquestionably growing demand for funds is in part the result of changes in the way campaigns are run. In 2000, Supreme Court candidates ran television ad campaigns in only four states. New Politics 2000, at 13. Two years later, the number of states seeing television commercials financed by Supreme Court candidates rose by 75 percent. New Politics 2002, at 8. As of October 10 this year, candidates for their state's highest court bought television airtime in 12 states, tripling the number of states in just four years. Brennan Center for Justice, Buying Time 2004: Television Advertising in the 2004 Supreme Court Elections, at http://www.brennancenter.org/programs/buyingtime_2004/storyboard_2004_index.html. The high cost of airtime forces judicial candidates to raise large sums from parties interested in influencing judicial decision-making. See Paul D. Carrington & Adam R. Long, The Independence and Democratic Accountability of the Supreme Court of Ohio, 30 Cap. U. L. Rev. 455, 474 (2002) ("The expensiveness of media campaigns has the dramatic effect of forcing not only judicial candidates but sitting judges hoping for re-election to seek and accumulate large campaign war chests.") [hereinafter Independence and Democratic Accountability].

Studies show that most of the money financing Supreme Court campaigns is raised from persons and entities who regularly appear in court. See id. ("Often, lawyers or litigants who are likely to appear before the judge constitute large proportions of the contributions to judicial candidates."). From 1989 through 2000, nearly half of all contributions to Supreme Court candidates came from attorneys and business. New Politics 2000 at 9. In 2002, two thirds came from those sources. New Politics 2002 at 18.

The result can be an unhealthy dependence between judicial candidates and interest groups where interest groups back judicial candidates to secure their political agendas and candidates rely on interest group backing to achieve an to retain judicial office.

Anthony Champagne, Interest Groups and Judicial Elections, 34 Loy. L.A. L. Rev. 1391, 1393 (2001) [hereinafter Interest Groups]. That visible dependence prompts complaints that candidates “sully the court’s reputation by raising millions of dollars from parties and lawyers who have business before the court.” Texans for Public Justice, Payola Justice (1998), at <http://www.tpj.org/docs/1998/02/reports/payola/conclusion.s.html>. Without spending limits, candidates of high integrity are sullied by a campaign finance system that leaves them no choice but to raise as much as they can to ward off defeat or to win a seat.

B. The Unlimited Money Chase in Contemporary Judicial Elections Undermines Public Confidence in the Courts.

The rapid spread of highly visible, expensive campaigns for the bench, financed by groups and individuals with stakes in the outcome of judicial decision-making, is taking a toll on the courts. Survey research has shown that 76 percent of registered voters believe that campaign contributions influence judges’ decisions. Greenberg Quinlan Rosner Research & American Viewpoint, National Public Opinion Survey, Frequency Questionnaire at 4 (2001), at <http://www.justiceatstake.org/files/JASNationalSurveyResults.pdf>. Two-thirds of all voters believe that litigants who have made campaign contributions to judges often receive favorable treatment. See id. at 7. A similar poll in 1999 found that 81 percent of the public thought that political considerations influence judge’s decisions, and 78 percent believed that elected judges are influenced by having to raise campaign funds. See National Center for State Courts, How the Public Views the State Courts: A 1999 National Survey, at <http://www.ncsc.dni.us/ptc/ptc.htm>. Such statistics do not surprise the former Chief Justice of the (elected) Texas Supreme Court. He asks: “How can judges convince the public that their only constituency is the law when their tenure in office depends on campaign contributions from lawyers and litigants?” Hon. Thomas R. Phillips, Electoral Accountability and Judicial Independence, 64 Ohio St. L.J. 137, 144 (2003) [hereinafter Electoral Accountability].

The general public perception is shared, to a lesser but still alarming extent, by individuals with extensive experience in our justice system. Fully 26 percent of state court judges agreed that campaign contributions have more than a little influence on decisions. Greenberg Quinlan Rosner Research & American Viewpoint, National Public Opinion Survey, Frequency Questionnaire at 5 (2002), at <http://faircourts.org/files/JASJudgesSurveyResults.pdf>. A 1999 survey of Texas state judges conducted by that state’s Supreme Court and its bar association found that nearly half believed contributions had a significant effect on courtroom decisions. Texas Office of Court Administration & State Bar of Texas, The Courts and the Legal Profession in Texas—The Insider’s Perspective: A Survey of Judges, Court Personnel, and Attorneys, Executive Summary 5 (1999). Anecdotal evidence suggests that lawyers, too, believe that their contributions to judges affect their chances of success in court. David Barnhizer, “On the Make”: Campaign Funding and the Corrupting of the American Judiciary, 50 Cath. U. L. Rev. 361, 379 (2001) [hereinafter On the Make].

Even if trust in government is declining generally, erosion of confidence in the courts is of particular concern. “That is because the authority of ‘the least dangerous branch’ rests almost entirely on the voluntary compliance with its rulings by the other branches of government and by the public at large.” Electoral Accountability, at 144. Without public confidence in the fairness and impartiality of our courts, the rule of law is at risk.

C. This Court Should Grant a Writ of Certiorari to Clarify the Application of Buckley to Circumstances Not Considered in That Case.

Judicial campaigns were not always contentious and expensive. “The old style of judicial campaign was a low budget affair where the judicial candidate spoke to any group willing to hear a dull speech about improving the judiciary or about judicial qualifications.” Interest Groups, 34 Loy. L.A. L. Rev. at 1393. The large campaign contributions and scandals of the Watergate years that motivated Congress to enact spending limits in the 1974 amendments to the Federal Election Campaign Act were confined at that time to elections for legislative and executive office. “Judicial campaigns first experienced [soaring spending] in only a few states, starting in the early 1980s.” Roy A. Schotland, Campaign Finance in Judicial Elections, 34 Loy. L.A. L. Rev. 1489, 1489 (2001). Buckley thus did not and could not consider the special threats presented by uncontrolled fundraising in judicial elections when examining the state interests that might justify spending limits.

Notwithstanding this history, courts adjudicating the constitutionality of spending limits in judicial campaigns have interpreted Buckley to preclude such caps. See Suster v. Marshall, 149 F.3d 523, 529 (6th Cir. 1999), aff’g, 951 F. Supp. 693 (N.D. Ohio 1996). According to Suster, when considering the constitutionality of expenditure ceilings, “the prevention of corruption is the only interest the Supreme Court has and, hence, this Court will give credence,” id. at 532, and every other justification must be summarily dismissed “irrespective of the kind of position sought,” id. at 530. But the White Court has since declared, “we neither assert nor imply that the First Amendment requires campaigns for judicial office to sound the same as those for legislative office.” 536 U.S. at 783. This Court should therefore grant the petition for a writ of certiorari in this case to clarify that Buckley does not preclude consideration of the new and unique threats presented by uncontrolled fundraising from special interests in campaigns for the bench or the unique rationales for spending limits in those campaigns. If Buckley does represent that absolute bar, the writ should be granted to reconsider Buckley.

II. Limits on Spending in Judicial Campaigns Are Supported by Especially Compelling Interests Not Considered in Buckley.

Buckley considered and rejected three interests proffered in defense of spending limits in federal campaigns for executive and legislative office. 424 U.S. at 39-59. But “Buckley’s rejection of expenditure restrictions for presidential and congressional elections is distinguishable because of the unique nature of the judicial role and the importance of judicial independence.” Erwin Chemerinsky, Preserving an Independent Judiciary: The Need for Contribution and Expenditure Limits in Judicial Elections, 74 Chi.-Kent L. Rev. 133, 135 (1998) [hereinafter Preserving an Independent Judiciary]. In addition to the interest in judicial independence, the interests in judicial impartiality and the appearance of independence and impartiality, see J.J. Gass, After White: Defending and Amending the Canons of Judicial Ethics (Brennan Center for Justice 2004), at <http://www.brennancenter.org/resources/ji/ji4.pdf> (defining the three separate interests) [hereinafter After White], also provide grounds for distinguishing Buckley. Deborah Goldberg, Public Funding of Judicial Elections: The Role of Judges and the Rules of Campaign Finance, 64 Ohio St. L. J. 95, 116-17 (2003) (“[T]he state interests uniquely implicated in [campaigns for the bench] provide a compelling justification for limiting spending by judicial candidates.”). Because courts reviewing the constitutionality of spending limits in judicial elections have rejected consideration of any justifications not explicitly endorsed by the Buckley Court, a writ of certiorari should be granted in this case to eliminate any confusion about the nature of the interests that might justify caps on spending in specialized contexts.

A. Courts Should Be Permitted to Consider Whether the Interest in Judicial Impartiality Supports Spending Limits in Campaigns for the Bench.

The mandate for judicial impartiality is implicit in the Due Process Clause of the U.S. Constitution. See In re Murchison, 349 U.S. 133, 136 (1955) (“A fair trial in a fair tribunal is a basic requirement of due process.”). As one court has recently affirmed, “litigants have a right guaranteed under the Due Process Clause to a fair and impartial magistrate and the State, as the steward of the judicial system, has the obligation to create such a forum” Raab v. State Comm’n on Judicial Conduct, 793 N.E.2d 1287, 1290-91 (N.Y. 2003). Although the term “impartiality” may be understood in a variety of ways, see White, 536 U.S. at 775-78; Ofer Raban, Judicial Impartiality and the Regulation of Judicial Election Campaigns, 15 U. Fla. J.L. & Pub. Pol’y 205, 21-19 (2004) (criticizing White’s analysis of impartiality), under one common post-White construction, impartiality is a compelling interest that may well support spending limits in judicial campaigns.

Since White, courts have recognized that impartiality precludes judges “from binding themselves, or appearing to bind themselves, to take action against particular kinds of parties.” After White at 7 (emphasis added). On this understanding, admitted favoritism toward law enforcement in criminal cases is inconsistent with impartiality. See Watson v. State Comm’n on Judicial Conduct, 794 N.E.2d 1, 4-5 (N.Y. 2003); In re Kinsey, 852 So. 2d 77, 88-89 (Fla.), cert. denied, 124 S. Ct. 180 (2003). Impartiality would also foreclose a preference for plaintiffs or defendants in tort cases.

But the dynamics of modern judicial elections press candidates for the bench toward precisely this form of bias. The unlimited demand for funds inherent in any campaign finance system without expenditure ceilings forces candidates to accept large sums from well-defined special interests, whether plaintiff-side personal injury lawyers or defense-side corporate lawyers. Compare Independence and Democratic Accountability at 474 (describing trial lawyer contributions) with Preserving an Independent Judiciary at 137 (describing contributions from corporate defense lawyers). We cannot assume that judges will ignore the prospect of losing that support in the next election if they fail to meet contributors' expectations. To reduce the demand for campaign funds and thereby combat that threat to impartiality, courts should be permitted to consider whether limits on judicial campaign spending are constitutional.

B. Courts Should Be Permitted to Consider Whether the Interest in Judicial Independence Supports Spending Limits in Campaigns for the Bench.

Like “impartiality,” judicial “independence” is also susceptible to various interpretations, and the two terms are sometimes used interchangeably. See White, 536 U.S. at 775 n.6. But when “independence” is not used merely as a synonym for “impartiality,” it speaks to a second value of constitutional significance—the principle of separation of powers. See Griffen v. Ark. Judicial Discipline & Disability Comm’n, 130 S.W.3d 524, 532 (Ark. 2003) (“Judicial independence is a hallmark of our system of government, and we cannot abide . . . entanglements between the judicial and other branches of government . . .”).

An independent judiciary is: (1) not dominated by or dependent on the other two branches of government; (2) not unduly entangled in the political machinery of the other branches . . . ; and (3) not actuated in its decision-making process by the same considerations and interests as the other branches.

After White at 8. At the very least, the third aspect of judicial independence is implicated in the financing of campaigns for the bench.

Judicial campaign finance systems that require candidates to collect unlimited numbers of private contributions give enormous power to wealthy interest groups. The control by those groups over the large sums needed for campaigns carries with it the ability to influence the pool of judicial candidates. Candidates whose commitment to considering each case on its merits is demonstrably paramount will be less likely to attract support than candidates who give priority to political considerations. Increasingly, the distinction between the judiciary and the other branches of government—a distinction that enables courts to serve as a check on executive and legislative power—will be blurred. For this reason, too, courts should be permitted to consider whether limits on judicial campaign spending are constitutional.

C. Courts Should Be Permitted to Consider Whether the Interest in the Appearance of Impartiality and Independence Supports Spending Limits in Campaigns for the Bench.

The interest in the appearance of impartiality and independence is a third and distinct interest that may support spending limits in judicial elections. As this Court has recognized: “The Due Process Clause may sometimes bar trial by judges who have no actual bias and who would do their very best to weigh the scales of justice equally between the contending parties.” Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Lavoie, 475 U.S. 813, 825 (1986) (internal quotation omitted). Appearances count because “[t]he legitimacy of the Judicial Branch ultimately depends on its reputation for impartiality and nonpartisanship.” Mistretta v. United States, 488 U.S. 361, 407 (1989).

That reputation has been besmirched by the influence of money in judicial elections. The unlimited fundraising from special interests on both sides of various policy debates has drawn accusations of “capture” and “legalized bribery.” On the Make at 361, 427. There is a compelling interest in stemming this loss of trust, because “without public confidence the judicial branch could not function.” Hon. William H. Rehnquist, Keynote Address at the Washington College of Law Centennial Celebration, 46 Am. U.L. Rev. 263, 274 (1996). Combating threats to the appearance of impartiality and independence represents a third compelling interest potentially justifying limits on spending in judicial elections. This Court should grant the petition for a writ of certiorari in this case to clarify that Buckley does not preclude consideration of that interest or, if such consideration is barred, to revisit Buckley.

CONCLUSION

The changed circumstances of judicial elections over recent years and the distinct interests supporting spending limits in campaigns for the bench argue for allowing states to make the case for caps on judicial spending. As long as the ceilings are high enough to ensure that all candidates can convey their message to voters, due process concerns for the impartiality and independence of the courts—in reality and appearance—should overcome burdens on the candidates’ First Amendment rights. But as Buckley has been interpreted by the Sixth Circuit in Suster and the Tenth Circuit in the instant case, the door is closed to such arguments. Amici understand that this case does not directly concern judicial elections. But Amici respectfully request that the Court grant the petition for a writ of certiorari in this case to clarify whether Buckley presents an absolute bar to consideration of new facts and new state interests when reviewing the constitutionality of spending limits and, if such consideration is foreclosed, to revisit Buckley.

Respectfully submitted,

Deborah Goldberg
Counsel of Record
BRENNAN CENTER FOR JUSTICE
AT NYU SCHOOL OF LAW
161 Avenue of the Americas
12th Floor
New York, NY 10013
(212) 998-6730

October 25, 2004